

Hide in the shadows you may, but listen you must to the stories of an ignored old woman about the coming of the Son of the Sun, his army of battle-hardened Conquistadors and the Great Dying that followed.

"Mr. Smith has written a fantastic tale from the Native American point of view about the conquest of the New World by Hernando DeSoto. He has done impeccable research . . . made that period in our history come alive for me. I learned much more about the conquest of the New World and life around the Mississippi River that now makes me want to read even more."

Kindle Book Review - Dawn Edwards

"I love this story, and I applaud Daniel A. Smith on his diligent research. Smith writes some strong characters in this gripping story. Every human emotion is engaged, and at times I felt like I was right there with Manaha and the tribes who fought against DeSoto. Superbly done. I'm sure I will be reading this book again."

The Jelly Bomb Review - SK

"Smith has created a wealth of history and culture that will make you weep. Creating words and phrases with a poetic sense, building a feel for Native American culture that feels so genuine and, yet, is eminently readable."

Books, Movies, Reviews! Oh my! - Kathy Davie

Storykeeper

DANIEL A SMITH

Storykeeper

DANIEL A SMITH